ONE SENTENCE

Back to One is an Android self-tape studio that reads the other parts, listens for the actor's lines and cues the next one, then records with a teleprompter by the lens.

WHAT IT DOES

Self tapes live or die on the reader, and the reader is usually whoever the actor could talk into it. Back to One is a patient scene partner: pick your role and every other character is read aloud, each with its own voice. On-device speech recognition follows along as you speak and cues the next line when you finish, with no tapping and no fixed timing. Memorize mode fades the lines in five steps down to a blind cue, then Record puts a prompter beside the camera with eyeline and framing guides.

KEY FEATURES

- A reader that listens: cues by speech, or by tap, Bluetooth pedal or volume key
- Teleprompter by the lens: full text, cue-only or first-letter modes; unmirrored recording
- Memorize mode with word-by-word checking and a "Line?" prompt
- Imports PDF, Final Draft, Fountain, Word, and photos of printed sides
- A built-in scene library with ratings; child profiles capped at PG
- Portrait, landscape and foldables, where the cover screen can show the prompter

PRIVACY

No account, no analytics and no tracking. Takes, scripts and profiles stay in the app's private storage. Speech recognition, voices and script import run on the device. Optional cloud voices and AI script tools stay off until the user switches them on with their own API key; recordings are never uploaded.

AVAILABILITY

Back to One is out now on Google Play for Android in the United States. Rehearsing and recording are free; Studio days, a one-time Pro purchase and the All Access subscription open the Studio tools and AI voices.
